Dr. Kellogg Tells How the Famous Speech

Talking with a correspondent of the Boston Herald, the Rev. Elijah Kellogg of Harpswell, Me., thus described how he wrote that favorite declamation of schoolboys, "Spartacus to the Gladiators":

"It was while I was at Andover." said he, smiling as the remembrance of the event came back to him. "We were required to prepare save for the forced gayety of the langhspeeches for our rhetorical exercises, and after each man had spoken he was subject to criticism by his fellows-and their comments weren't always so complimentary as they were pointed. Then the professor would follow with serious criticism, and he always found faults that needed correcting. "So these speeches came to be looked upon with dread, and at last I he persisted. made up my mind that I'd try to get something so different from anything ly a tear, clinging for a moment to the end we had had and so interesting that it would hold their attention too closely for them to think about points on which to criticise me, and so I would get off free.

"Well, I wrote 'Spartacus,' When I began, it worked just as I had expected. They were so taken by surprise that they never thought of anything but the speech. You could have heard a pin drop at any time troth to me? I will unsay the words." while I was speaking, and they did not recover until I had finished and had come down to ask for criticism.

"Then when Professor Payne turned to the students and inquired, What criticism have you to offer, young gentlemen? there wasn't one of them had a word to say, for they were all thinking of the piece and hadn't noticed anything else.

"'Gentlemen,' said the professor, 'we are not here for theological disquisitions nor for learned arguments, but these exercises are purely rhetorical, and, gentlemen, that is rhetoric.' "Then turning to me he remarked. 'I could criticise you, Kellogg, but I don't know whether it would do you more good or harm, and so on the whole I think I will say nothing.'

"So," added the old gentleman, with a chuckle, "I escaped criticism."

Jealousy.

"Man," she said, with an air of conviction, "is the most jealous creature on earth."

"Why is it," he asked, not answering the question directly, "that if a at once attributes it to jealousy? ties of life. - Detroit Tribune. Why is it that if she puts a slight upon him and he resents it she jump; at the conclusion that he is jealous?

"She doesu't. She is never mistaken," she retorted.

"Does she realize," he went on, "that jealousy, when it is justifiedand it is never really justified unless a man has a claim on a wordan, among other things, that "sae gude a of one of two things-either the man eye in the congregation when it was anis the worst kind of a fool or the nounced that he was to go to America to woman is beneath contempt? Does seek his fortune," He proved to be not than either of the others. Another she realize the light in which her only a good clerk, but obliging to his conclusion makes her pose, whichever explanation may be correct? Why do they do itr"

"Possibly you know," she said haughtily.

"Yes," he said softly as he looked around for his hat. "It is because of their innate self love and self conceit.'

The engagement was broken, but he felt that he had squared accounts anyway.-Chicago Record.

A Geological Barometer.

A remarkable geoloogical substance found in Finland is a stone which foretells by a change of color the probable character of the weather in the near future—a natural barometer -known by the name of semakuir, and which is said to turn black short ly before an approaching rain, while in fine weather it is mottled with spots of white. For a long time, it appears, this interesting phenomenon was inexplicable, but on an analysis of the stone it was shown to be a fosstl mixed with clay, and containing a portion of rock salt and niter. This fact being known, the explanation of the changes became easy. The salt, absorbing the moisture, turns black when the conditions are favorable for rain, while the dryness of the atmosphere must as naturally bring out the salt from the interior of the stone in white spots on the surface.-New York Sun.

"Hast thou sorrows," he demanded, "of which I, your fiance, know not?" She trembled. "Arabella, I insist."

It was dark now. Outside the autumn wind whistled drearily, and the flickering lights cast weird shadows upon the pavement. The efforts of the one man band to get in tune warned them that the evening was wearing on apace. "Arabella, now or never."

With sudden calmness she confronted

Scotch Consistency.

Extreme piousness is often more provocative of humor than of admiration, as the employers of a certain puritanical young Scotchman have found out. He came from some country place near Edinburgh with the strongest of recommendations from his old pastor, who stated either as wife or fiancee-is a proof boy he was that there was scarcely a dry friends, and when the annual picnic was planned he proposed to save his fellow clerks the expense of printing their programmes by typewriting them himself. When, however, the list of diversions for the day's pleasure was handed him, and he found that dancing was among them, he exclaimed violently:

"Pil nae print that ungodly word dancing on paper. I'll typewrite the rest of it and leave a blank for that wicked word, which some of you worldly men can put in for yourselves!"-Harper's Bazar.

A FRIGHTFUL WRECK

Not a Woman Was Saved, and the Speet cle Was Appalling.

Perhaps the most frightful wreck on the American coast was that of the White Star steamship Atlantic at Marr's island, near Halifax, at 2 o'clock in the morning of March 31, 1873. Five hundred and saxty perished out of a total of 978 persons

The disaster was so tremendous that the newspapers at first regarded the news as an attempt to perpetrate a cruel April fool hoax.

Without the slightest warning the steamer struck on a rock. The sea carried away the port boats. Before the weather boats could be cleared the ship rolled over. The sounds that arose from below decks were soul stirring. Most of the women and children were down there in the darkness wailing pitifully.

The captain ordered the passengers to climb into the rigging and to crowd forward where the wreck was highest and out of reach of the waves. The officers of the ship got a line to a rock about 40 yards distant and then managed to get four other lines across. About 200 people managed to reach the rock. Be tween the rock and the shore was: gulf of about 300 feet and a rope wa stretched over this. Fifty personreached the island and aroused the inhabitants, who furnished boats and took the half frozen survivors from the rock. Those who still clung to the side of the ship and the rigging were also rescued.

Not a woman was saved. The first officer held one woman in the rigging until she froze to death and was left there, half nude, with protruding eyes and foamy lips, the ghastly spectacle being rendered more terrible by the splendid jewels which sparkled on her hands. A boy who hung onto the icy rigging near the dying woman was washed away. but he managed to reach a boat. The last man in the rigging was the first officer, who was saved through the heroic efforts of the Rev. Mr. Ancient.

Many of the passengers, saloon and steerage, died in the rigging from cold and fright. The sea washed away the women and children, and the shore of the island was soon thickly strewn with the dead. The natives plundered the bodies and mutilated the hands of the women in order to get their rings.

One woman was seen in the waves holding two children, while a third had its little arms around her neck. She went down almost instantly, and the loud, passionate cry of the poor mother as she sank with her little ones could be heard all over the wreck.-New York Herald.

Strange Lakes.

The Dead sea and the Great Salt lake are the best known examples of lakes below the sea level whose water is briny with salt. The Mohave sink and the Salton desert are the beds of just such lakes. On the peninsula in the Caspian sea is a small lake more heavily saturated with salt Caspian lake has the color of the rose and a pleasant smell, both derived from a peculiar weed which grows in its basin. The lake of pitch or asphaltum, in Trinidad, from which comes most of our asphalt, is certainly one of the marvels of lake-

The lakes of Switzerland are great settling beds for glacier mud. Every one has a gray river flowing into its upper end, a blue river leaving it at the other. Eleven miles of the head of Lake Geneva have been filled up with the gray glacier grit of the Rhone. The queer finger shaped lakes of western New York, all running north and south, were undoubtedly scooped out and formed by glacial action, their steep banks being formed by glacial moraines. All of them are deepest at the southern end. -Kansas City Times.

Painted Senoritas.

After having heard so much about the beauty of the dark eyed, olive tinted senorus and senoritas of South America, it is startling to find their natural charms obscured under clouds and drifts of paint and powder, and that the enamels, cosmetics and other French devices, which seem to constitute the most important articles of their toilets, have rendered most of them positively ghastly when seen by "the garish light of day," old and haggard in appearance while yet young in years. Doubtless this pernicious paint habit originated in the admiration which these naturally sallow skinned people entertain for the Saxon pink and white, forgetting that by the psychologic laws of contrast blonds are attracted to brunettes as powerfully as are the latter to their own opposites.

I have a profound respect for "hustlers." They wear a different enthusiasm for every day in the week. One of them rushed several miles to see me and came into my room panting and perspiring.

"What's the matter?" I asked. "I've a great idea!" he gasped. "Well, cool off, get your breath, and when you are in a proper state of repose let her go."

"It's a title for a book!" he said. "Inspiration-worth $20,000! I've copyrighted it. You can do it in two weeks. There's a pot in it."

"In what?" I asked. "In the book," he said glaringly. "Have you got the book?"

"No, sir. Better than that-I've got the title. Don't you understand?" He leaped from the chair, pushed his hat back, crouched forward and swept his arm impetuously across the side of the room.

"Look at it there in big letters. 'Drop by Drop!' Great Scott it's an instantaneous winner. 'D-r-o-p by D-r-o-p!' How does it sound?"

"What's the book about?" I asked. "I don't care for the book," he said as he wiped the perspiration from his brow. "You write the book on anything you like, but call it 'Drop by Drop!' That's all I want. Heavens and earth, man, don't you see it?"-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Autograph Fiend.

One day when Mr. Phelps was minister to the court of St. James a gentleman from Omaha called upon him with the modest request that he would assist him in obtaining a number of autographs of eminent Englishmen. The visitor was indeed not scrupulous to exclude eminent English women, and if Mr. Phelps could obtain for him a few friendly lines from the queen they should have an honored place in his town hall, on whose behalf he had undertaken the commission.

disappointments in life. Mr. Phelps was struck with the quiet pertinacity of the man and helped him to a good many valuable married three times.-New York autographs. Appetite growing with what it fed upon, the gentleman from Omaha declared he could not go back without obtaining a specimen of the poet laureate's handwriting. Mr. Phelps said he did not know Lord Tennyson, and from what he had heard of him thought he was not approachable on the subject. "But." he said, "you write to him yourself in your own way; tell him your business here and what you want from him." The gentleman from Omaha obeyed the instruction, and after a few posts there reached him a manuscript copy of the first page of "In Memoriam" in Tennyson's own hand writing and signed by his name .-Sheffield Independent.
